

Commanding Officer's/ Inspector Instructor's Policy on Standards of Conduct

Marines and Sailors of 1/25,

The honor and reputation of this battalion rests on the daily conduct of its Marines and Sailors. Whether in uniform or our, on duty or off, at home or abroad, you represent this command, the Marine Corps, and the Nation. Our conduct must always reflect the values of Honor, Courage, and Commitment.

We will treat one another with dignity and respect. Hazing, harassment, discrimination, or conduct unbecoming of a Marine or Sailor will not be tolerated. Integrity and discipline are expected in every action – from the way we wear the uniform, to the manner in which we engage our communities, to the decisions we make in private life.

Leaders at every level must set the example, enforce standards, and correct deficiencies immediately and professionally. Every Marine and Sailor is responsible for holding themselves and their peers accountable.

The standard is simple: conduct yourselves in a way that brings credit to yourself, to this battalion, and to the Corps. If you are unsure whether a course of action is appropriate, ask yourself: “Would this make my family, my leaders, and my fellow Marines proud?” If the answer is no, don’t do it.

This battalion’s legacy is built on discipline, professionalism, and character. Protect it with your actions every day.

Semper Fidelis,

A handwritten signature in black ink, appearing to read 'M. K. Burke'.

M. K. Burke
Lieutenant Colonel, U.S Marine Corps
Commanding Officer

A handwritten signature in black ink, appearing to read 'G. J. Kirsch'.

G. J. Kirsch
Lieutenant Colonel, U.S. Marine Corps
Inspector-Instructor